

A: Taken from the quickstart guide on github, you would need to set the batch variable `%IsProductActivated%` to be true before running the command line script to activate your product. After a bit of searching I found a blog article on how to do this which does not require batch. You can use the command line tools installed on your system and it should work. Tuesday, December 24, 2011 Dye 'Em Red I love this new technique! It's just so much fun to use, and no muss no fuss. I would definitely like to play with this technique a bit more in the future. I started out by creating a base for my pattern using a silk shimmer. I first drew a pattern on a piece of paper and pinned the silk on to the paper with straight pins. When you do this, ensure that the silk overlaps a couple of times, so you will still be able to see a fabric-like design. I then used a pair of sharp scissors and carefully snipped around the edges. I felt that I was able to get about a 3/16 inch from my point of snipping. I then removed the pins and pulled the silk off of the paper with steady hands. I then used one of my silk star shells to mark the lines that I wanted to snip. Because my pattern was fairly simple, I just put the marker on each line and cut it off with scissors. I started by making a red block and then added a few red dots and a black star/hexagon. I tried to feel my way to a design and started stippling in the red dots and the black star/hexagon. With the tips of my fingers, I pressed the red dots and stars into the silk. I was not trying to create a permanent effect and just wanted to see what I could do before I added another layer of pattern. It was also pretty exciting to be able to create a pattern on a piece of silk. I think I might have to go buy a larger silk or go to a store with a large selection. I would definitely like to play with more patterns in the future. Ewa Grześkowiak Ewa Grześkowiak (born 26 January 1983 in Grodno) is a Polish rower.
